Press Report

Sharing data, the right way

On the 14th February, valentine's day, the Freising-based system house treeConsult invites all interested users to Munich Airport. There, clients such as Continental report how they securely share large files with their customers, partners and providers.

The Business Hub Day on the 14th February at Munich Airport is all about file exchange and answering the following questions:

- How do these large data quantities find the right recipient?
- How do you avoid misdirected mail?
- Where do you store large files temporarily?

The Freising-based system house treeConsult has not only invited existing customers such as Continental and the health-care market specialist Noventt to Munich Airport. It has also invited the technology providers IBM, IPswitch and Dracoon.

For example, Christopher-John Müller will give a talk on how "Managed File Transfer" (MFT) is managed at Continental: "The high number of users entails a huge number of different requirements, and that exactly is the challenge. We can now manage it through the management portal. What's so special about it is that we were able to fully integrate our extensive SAP environment", says the Head of Customer & Supplier Integration at Continental.

Jörg Lanzinger from Noventi needs to control huge data quantities of highly sensible data: "Constant streams of input, very complex editing operations, billing processes where nothing is allowed to go wrong – we map all this with the MFT system and we can rely on it", says the head of applications development at the health-care market specialist.

On the 14th January, Michael Hoffmann from the IBM company Aspera will present the provider's patented transfer technology. Before that, Sebastien Roques-Shaw from IPswitch is going to present "Moveit" – the data transfer software of the US-American provider. The event will be rounded off by a talk by Marc Schieder. The Managing Director of the Dracoon GmbH based in Regensburg will show that modular and scalable cloud storages are suitable for small companies as well.
